9. EDUCATIONAL LEADERSHIP

(a) Areas of special interest and accomplishments in educational leadership

- Digital humanities

- “Applied Medievalism”:
 - the integration of teaching and research in/as learning: translatio, translation, comparative literature, and cultural studies; cultural literacy and literary culture.
 - teaching literature and reading: using multiple and mixed (including digital) technologies in teaching, learning, reading and other literary activities, and research; reading, reception, and refashioning; commentary and criticism.
 - practical applications and theoretical implications: how teaching literature helps to think about literature itself, in its broad sense and broader context; pre- and post-modern textualities and hypertextualities; feminism, gynarchism, hybridity, migrancy, cosmopolitanism, and tolerance; as bases for human values and humanist/ic lifelong learning.

(b) Curriculum development/renewal

- FREN 101 & 102: complete change, including:
 - the adoption of a new textbook (for the first time since at least 1998)
 - the development of associated new course materials
 - the addition of an online exercise component
 - a new oral/aural lab programme
 - integrating features from the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages
 - course sites: <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren101> and <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren102>
- FREN 215: course redesign (all at UBC Connect & Google Drive), new materials, etc.
- (last year) FREN333: completely new course, entirely online and free open materials: <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren333>

(d) Applications of and contributions to the scholarship of teaching and learning

The maintenance of useful resources for composition, commentary, criticism, literary studies, and Medieval studies; this is also a form of outreach to the larger scholarly community, at any academic level and including interested amateurs not affiliated with institutions:

- resources for beginners' French, including links to free dictionaries online: for example, <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren102/resources>
- for French literary studies (literary terminology, rhetoric, literary analysis): <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren220/liens>
- for commentary in French: <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren220/liens/ressources-pour-le-commentaire>
- for essay-writing ("la dissertation littéraire") in French: <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren220/liens/ressources-la-dissertation>
- for criticism and commentary (in English, but applicable elsewhere): <http://metametamedieval.com/2009/01/01/criticism>
- e-humanities and e-literature: <http://metametamedieval.com/2009/01/01/general-useful-links>
- Medieval studies, including cultural and contextual studies, primary sources online, and digital humanities hyperprojects: <http://metametamedieval.com/concatenations>

(e) Teaching and Learning Grants

Small Project TLEF, with Robert Miller (principal), Maria Carbonetti, and Joël Chauvin. "Blended Learning: Redesigning First- and Second-Year Language Courses in French and Spanish." Some introduction is at: <http://metametamedieval.com/2015/04/18/next-posts-april-august-2015-and-a-shiny-new-research-project/>

(f) Formal educational leadership responsibilities

Course coordination, including managing other instructors (undergraduate student lab monitors, graduate student teaching assistants, sessional lecturers, a French lecteur/lectrice, other 12-month lecturers, and teaching-stream faculty):

- FREN 101: a larger number of sections, several hundred students
- FREN 102: a larger number of sections, several hundred students
- FREN 215: 2 sections per term, year-long course

(g) Innovation in the use of learning technology

I've been using digital / electronic technologies as a normal part of teaching since 2001, and usually integrate them--as normal tools--with other normal tools. Like pens, pencils, whiteboards, speech, skits, and so on. The main challenge, a creative/innovative one, is how to manage in classrooms with ever-reducing interactive board provision for live action interactive teaching. The kind that has students coming to class because they don't know--and neither do you--exactly what is going to happen. This is often regarded as "exciting," rather like any other live performance with audience participation; except here the Fourth Wall is played with, rendered bendy, and mostly removed.

FREN 101 & 102:

- The adoption of automatically-corrected online exercises, enabling students to do regular practice outside class, as is usual for a language class but had proven logistically impossible (for traditional human marking) with increased class sizes;
- the regeneration of the language lab to include video and online components, more live interaction with lab monitors, and active/interactive comprehension (blending old and new technologies);
- the use of Story Cubes for creative writing exercises and quizzes (also used in FREN 122 & FREN 123);
- the practical application of work on the history of education and pedagogy in the Middle Ages, ex. teaching Latin (up to Erasmus's Adages) and 13th-century Occitan "grammars"—composition, rhetoric, and poetics treatises—the latter being amongst the first works in Europe on learning a non-Classical foreign language (of +/- "live" status at the time).

- Beginners' French II <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren102> (2013W)
- Beginners' French I & II <http://blogs.ubc.ca/fren101et102> (2013W)

FREN 333:

- This course continued the use of blogging developed in FREN 220, FREN 221, RMST 221, and MDVL 302;
- the use of online tools in undergraduate student research;
- assisting students in developing independent research projects in cultural studies as “curated collections” with commentary.
- an application of teaching scholarship: adapting work in history, art history, anthropology, library & museum studies;
- and, again, an application of work on the history of education and pedagogy in the Middle Ages, including work in literary studies on the practical nuts and bolts of composition, especially in rhetoric and commentary

Commentary, amongst other things on education, teaching and learning, and associated scholarly activities:

10. SCHOLARLY AND PROFESSIONAL ACTIVITIES

(a) Areas of special interest and accomplishments

- Outreach within the scholarly community via conferences: to maintain the visibility of marginal/-ised areas and minority languages and cultures: Medieval French and, especially, Occitan are under threat both within French literary studies and within Medieval studies (dominated as it is by History and English)
- Online wider outreach: contributions to conversations about digital medievalism; textuality and hypertextuality; and the uses of new technologies in teaching, learning, and research. Within larger fields of literary studies, emphasizing the "medievalism" of speculative, irrealist, and imaginative fictions
- Both online and at conferences: discussing (and helping others come to terms with the existence of) such scholarly marginality, as part of other marginalities of identity; opening up approaches that are inter- and trans-national, multi-cultural, hybrid, cosmopolitan, and tolerant; feminist, interactive, and inclusive.
